

Stay up to date with breast screening:

We'll mail you a reminder when it's time to return for your next screening mammogram.

- Women with one first degree relative (mother, sister, or daughter) with breast cancer should have a mammogram every year.
- Women without a family history of breast cancer can have a mammogram every two years.

Research has shown a 25 per cent reduction in deaths from breast cancer among women who have regular mammograms.

Some cancers cannot be detected on a mammogram due to the location of the cancer or the density of the breast tissue. If you notice a lump or any changes in your breast, please see your doctor.

Results

Your results will be sent to you and your doctor within three weeks.

Additional Testing

You may be asked to return for additional tests in the coming weeks if we need to look more closely at a specific area of your breast. This does not mean a cancer was found – over 95% of women called for additional tests do not have cancer.

Additional tests may include one or more of the following:

- Diagnostic mammogram
- Ultrasound
- Biopsy

of women who require further testing do not have cancer.
